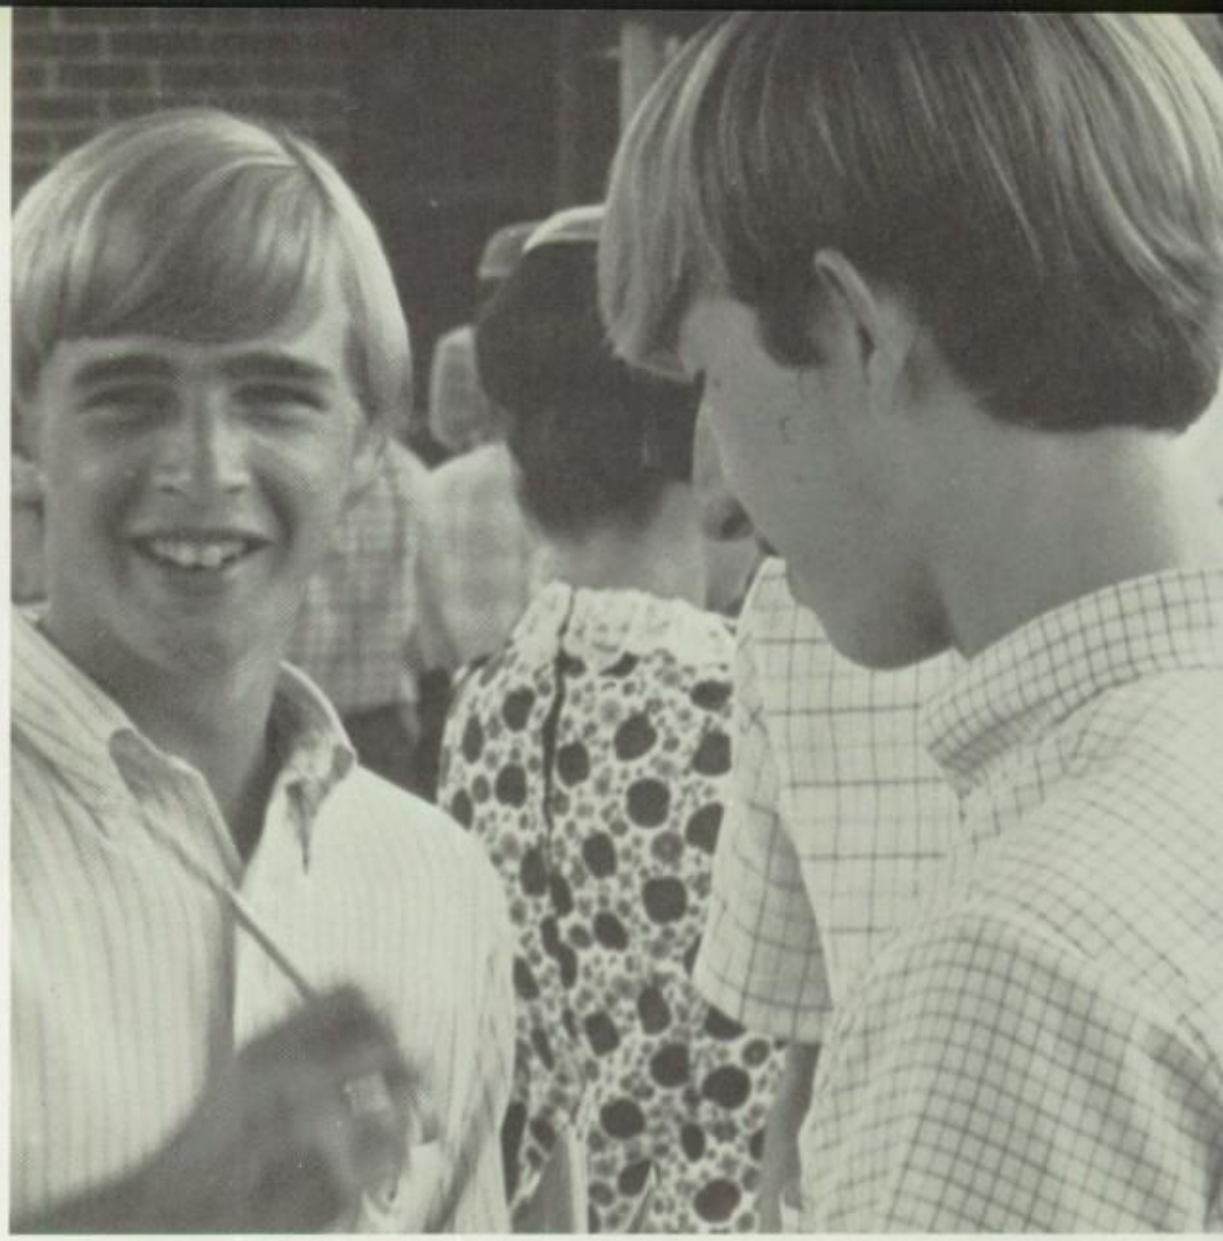
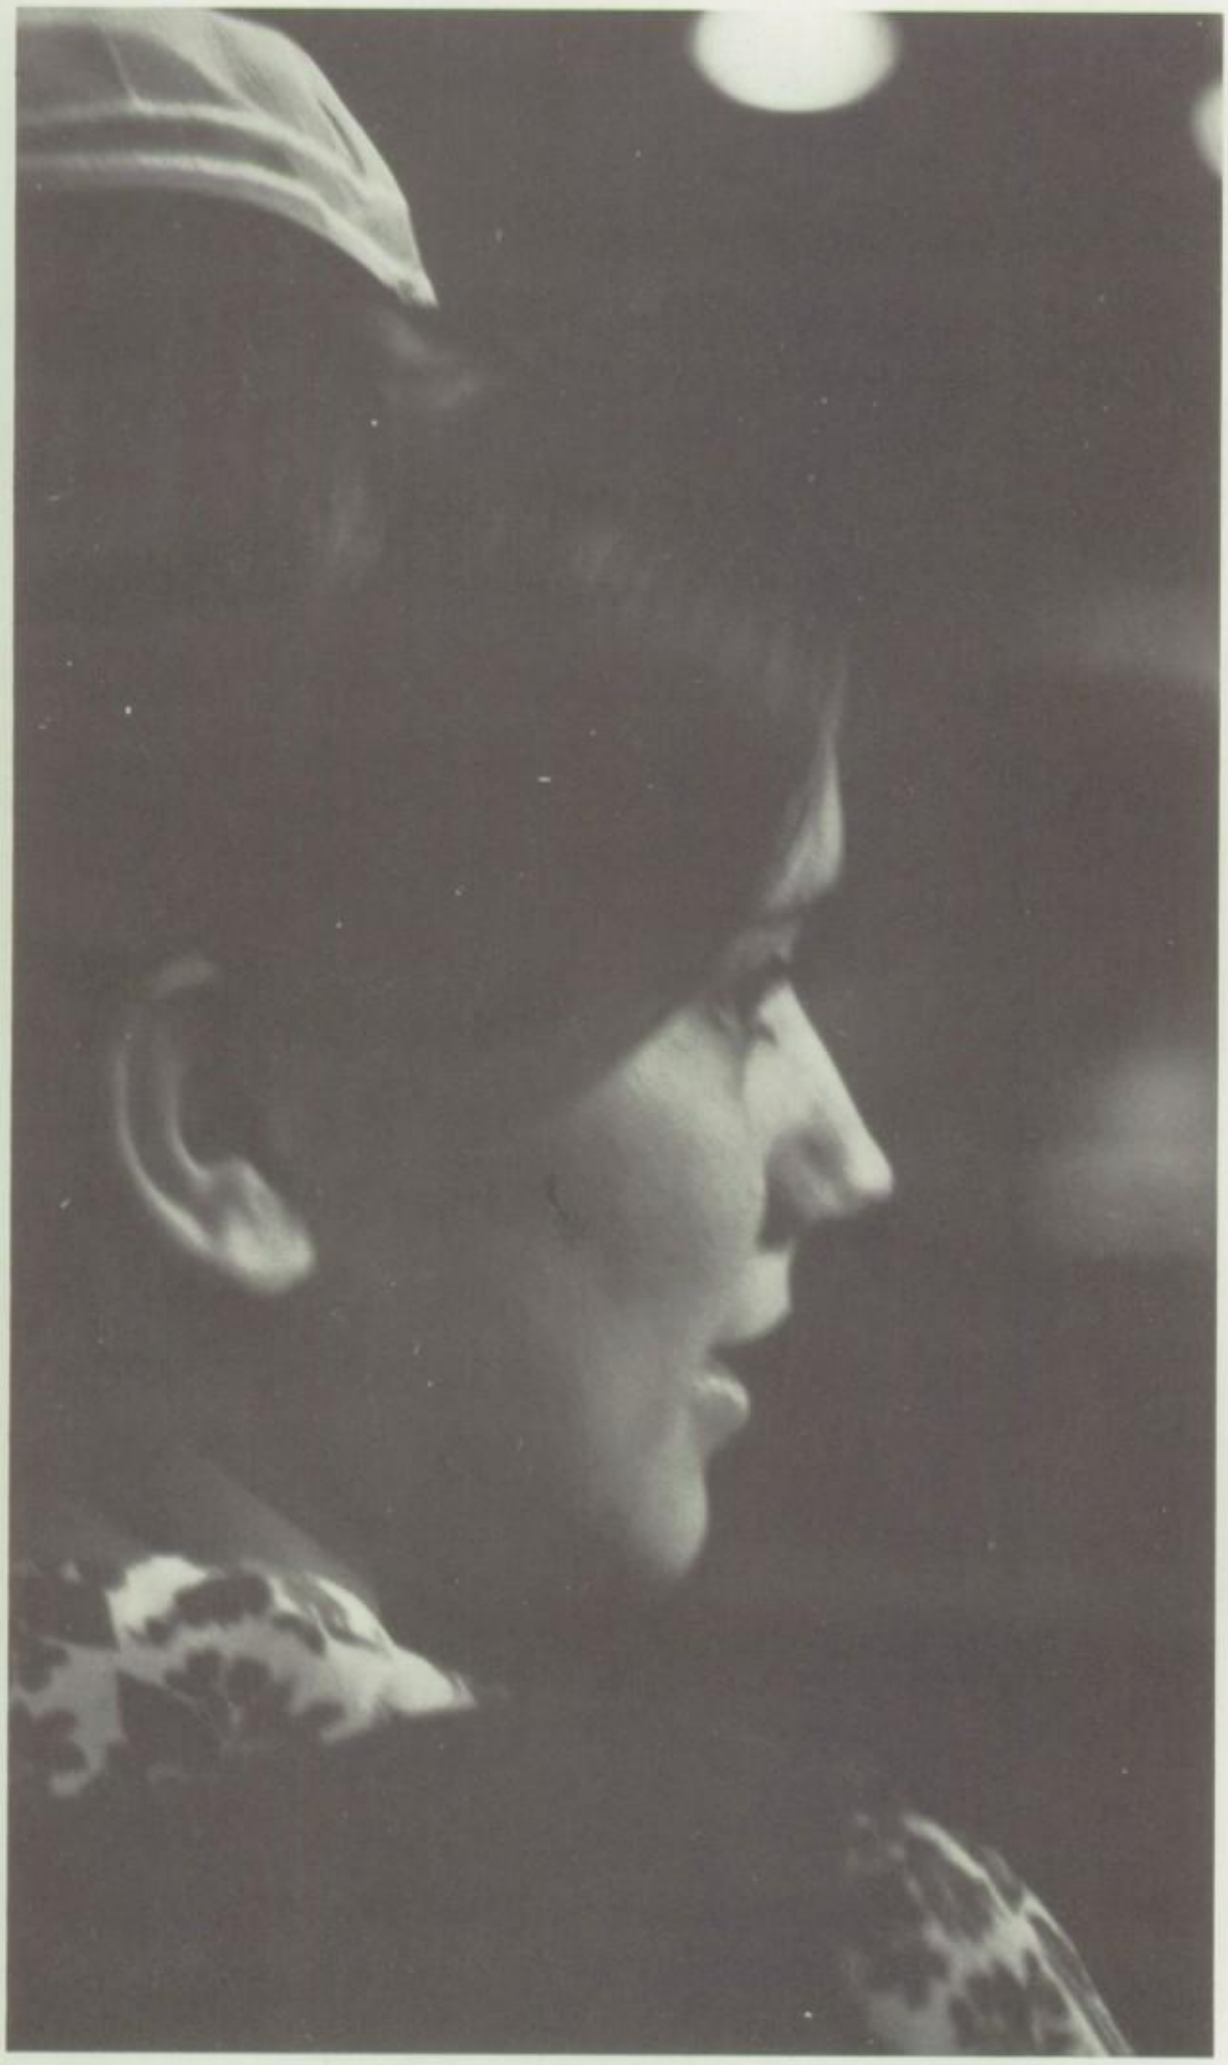
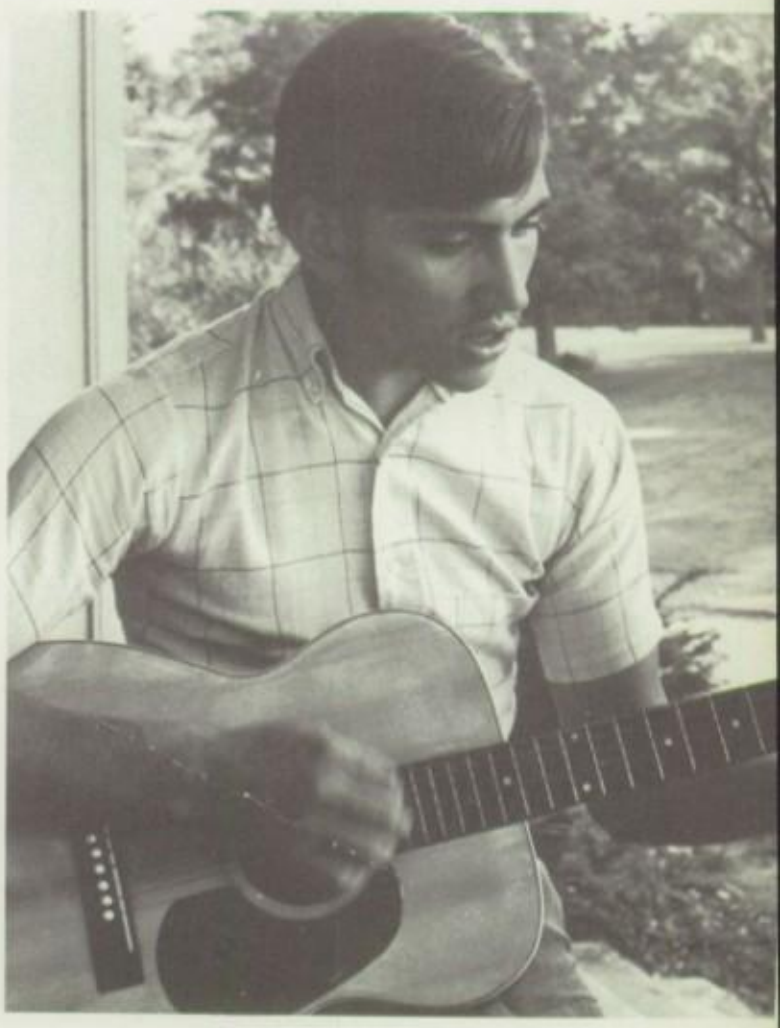
This was our year —
a year of bridges.

We came from insecurity
to a sense of belonging,
From dim illusions
to a deeper knowledge,





From a shaky faith
to a vibrant testimony,
From disunity
to a oneness of spirit.
Not that we attained
perfection,
but that we grew.



Gulfs were spanned
with the help of others.
Over troubled waters a friend reached out and understood.
When one bridge broke down,
someone built another in its place.
Some bridges were frail
and soon collapsed,
But others were strong enough to last for a lifetime.

Dedication

By words, smiles and an active life,
You proved to us your belief
That Christianity is not a binding religion
But a practical and joyful participation in life.

As a counselor you were understanding.
Your warmth and genuineness put us at ease.
Instead of asking prying questions, you sat and listened;
And we knew we had found a friend.
For this we say, "Thanks."

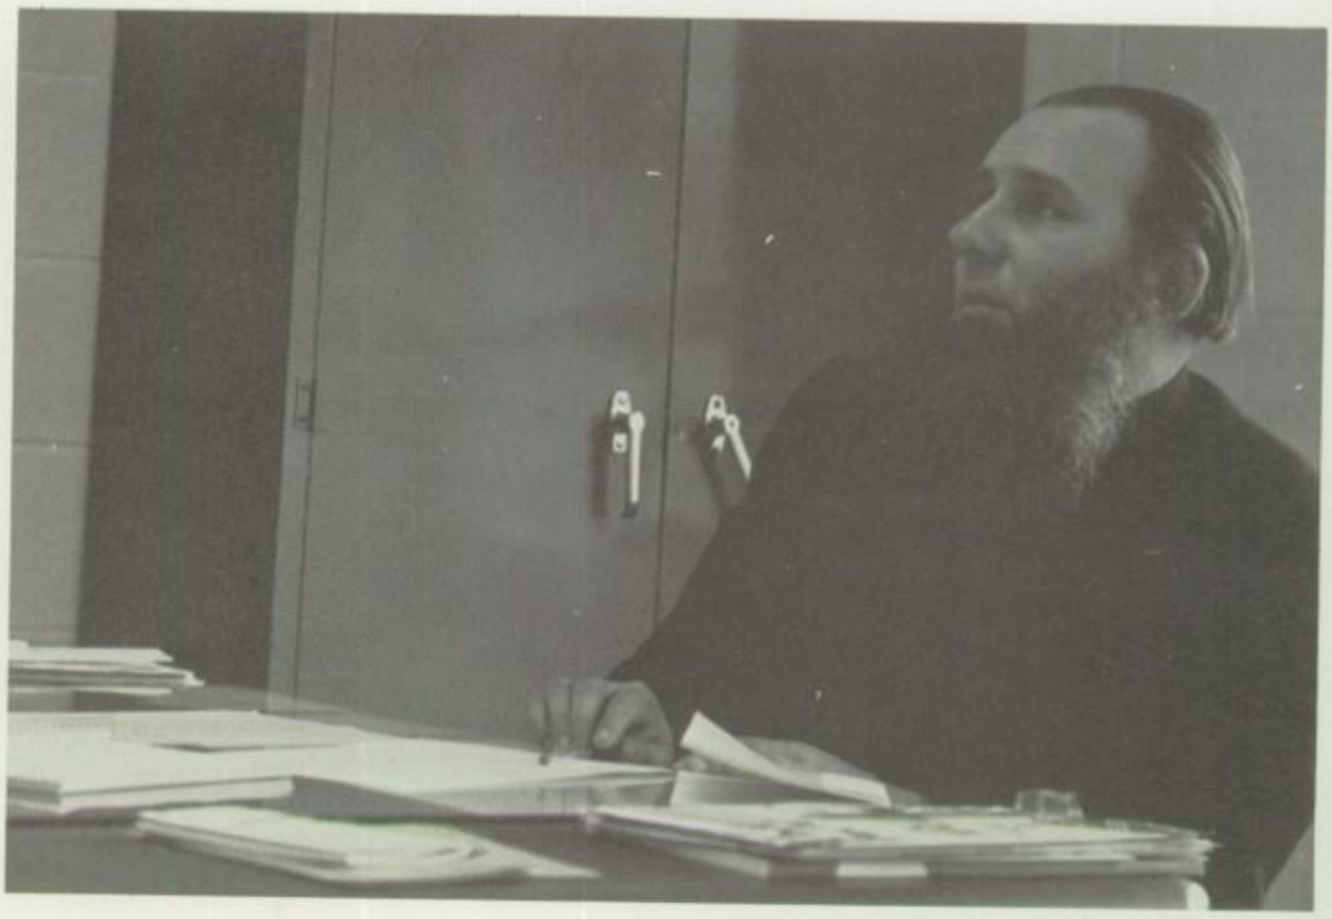
Faculty

Introducing . . .

This year the administrative responsibilities were placed into different hands; Mr. Brubaker was positioned as principal, and Mr. Dietz became assistant principal. Mr. Stoner continued his efficient management of the school's business. Because Mr. Brubaker was on campus only two days a week, Mr. Dietz was given a large share of responsibility. These three men were most dedicated; they gave ungrudgingly of their time and effort, working long hours into the night. We are grateful for their contributions and leadership in making this a successful year.



MYRON S. DIETZ, M.Ed.
Assistant Principal

CLYDE B. STONER, M.Ed.
Business Manager

"Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding." Learning facts is relatively easy; learning concepts is more important and more difficult; integrating these facts and concepts into the framework of God's revelation of Himself is the highest and most difficult educational task. It can be accomplished only as one makes a faith commitment to God and walks by the Holy Spirit.

Commitment with education added equals wisdom and understanding.

Principal
J. LESTER BRUBAKER, Ed.D.

Our Mother Tongue

English allowed us to identify with characters in literature as they faced life. We expressed ourselves in themes where teachers corrected dangling modifiers, misspellings, or poor punctuation.

Spanning Cultural Gaps

Many of our difficulties in life whether they are personal, national, or international stem from the inability to communicate with others. Learning a foreign language through dialogue, written work, or singing gave us an appreciation for another culture and increased our capacities for communication.

Oops, There Goes the HCl!

Math was a complicated and difficult subject, or it was similar to a challenging puzzle or game. Regardless of the way we viewed it, math proved to be a very valuable subject, not only in everyday life, but in the study of science.

Smelly halls, smellier frogs, worms and fetal pigs, and unexpected explosions were common occurrences in the science department. Classes provided those with an exploratory mind a chance for further research and discovery, and those with a desire for credits only with a subconscious understanding of the principles guiding our scientific world.

Class Forms Corporation

Merely assimilating facts about history, government, and economics has little value. It is the application of knowledge that challenges us with the need of relating to others and leads us to deeper involvement in the issues of the world today. It is because of this that economics class decided to organize their own business. Applying their knowledge and learning to economize, the students formed and operated their own corporation, finding it an exciting and profitable venture.

"In the Beginning, God . . ."

How involved can a Christian be in political and civic affairs? Is the spirit world ever-present and how much power does it exercise? Can we say we are lovers of peace when our churches are divided because of ill feelings toward a brother with differing beliefs?

Some of these questions and others were answered as we studied God's word in our two or three sessions a week. Whether we centered our study on a particular aspect, or studied it as a whole, the Bible became a more vital part of our life.

Students Capture Skills

While learning practical skills, creative students found self-expression in home economics, crafts, sewing, and art. Some of this work was displayed on the outdoor bulletin board. Under Mr. Hollinger's helpful supervision, male students created lamps, bookcases, picture frames, gun racks, and stereo cases with a professional look and quality.

"May I Help You?"

After years of inadequacy, our library was flooded by a wealth of new books: black literature, contemporary novels, theological treatises, casebooks on social concerns and collections of modern poetry. Thanks to our efficient librarians, the whole library was rearranged and useless old volumes were taken out.

The secretaries had a busy year, learning to operate the new intercommunication system, typing on the new-style report card, dittoing tests and papers for teachers and answering students' innumerable questions.

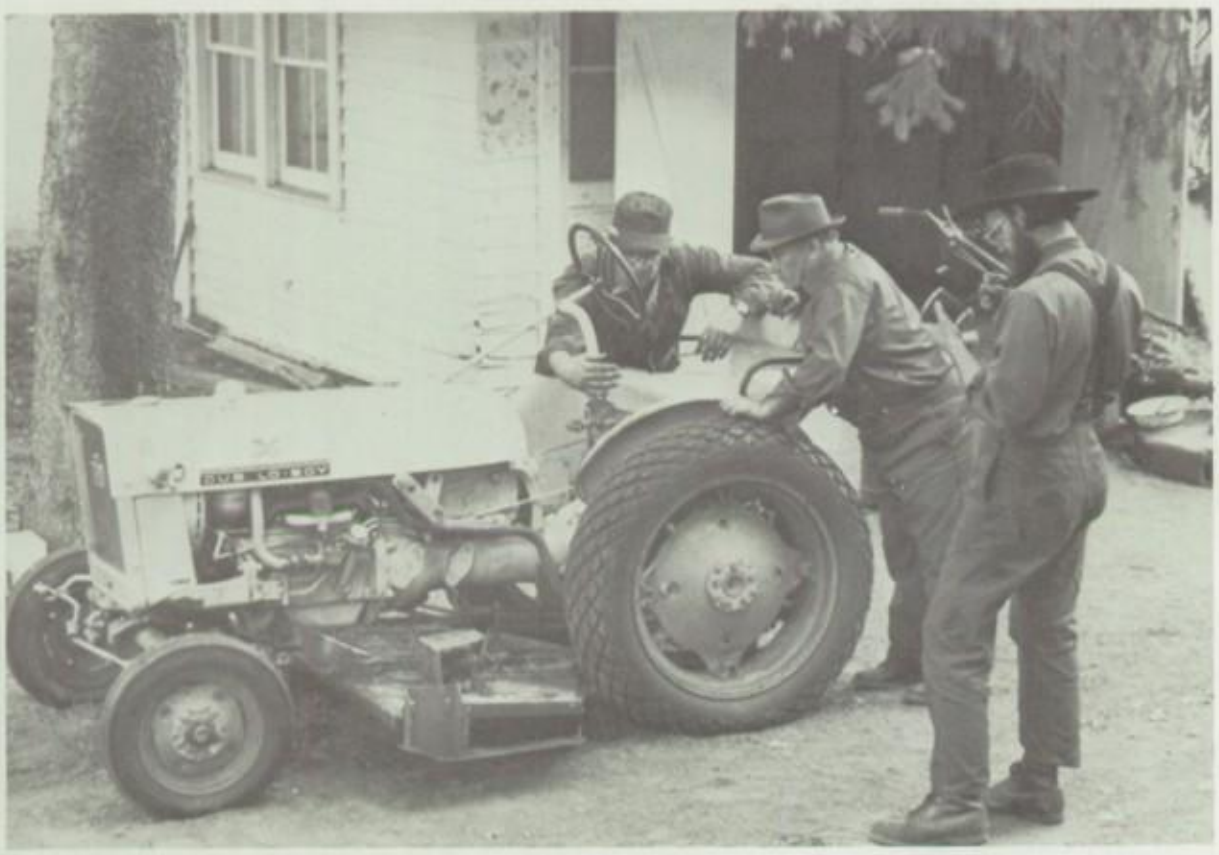
Dirt Removers and Workers in White



Each day as school ended and the last echo of student laughter and footsteps had died away, a new sound emerged. A vacuum sweeper, the banging of a trashcan, and whistling could be heard as our friendly, faithful janitors began their daily clean-up job. When a joke or singing filled the halls, we often found the source to be the new groundskeeper, Rick, a former barber and opera singer.

The cooks donned new institutional-style uniforms but their friendly service remained the same. Disposable paper trays and bowls made little dishwashing and gave our cooks more time to plan and serve better meals.

The Nicest Things

Overwhelmed by a sea of new faces, the tiny, timid freshmen faced their first day of school. But as the weeks passed, they made friends and found their place, giggling and throwing paper airplanes. In spite of their size, the freshmen proved to be good athletes, putting up a good fight against the sophomores in soccer and the tug-of-war.

We Want Action!"

On November 27, car loads of sophomores in the spirit of Thanksgiving headed for the Millersville Children's Home. They shared a dinner with the children there, played games with them and presented a skit. The two hours passed quickly, and as everyone said reluctant goodbyes, they realized how much happiness sharing brings.

When Christmas time came around, the active sophomores got together again, this time crowding on an open truck for an evening of caroling. They passed through country and town, filling the chilly air with the warm sound of Christmas.

Mr. President tries to think of a unique Christmas project for the class.

The junior class displayed their originality by selling 6,644 light bulbs instead of requiring class dues. After class business was taken care of during Tuesday homeroom periods, students participated in informal discussions of contemporary affairs or viewed movies that challenged their thinking.

A thought-provoking Thanksgiving program was presented to the student body on November 25. Through slides and narration, we were touched by the needs and hunger of the world and were made to feel guilty about our big Thanksgiving dinner.

The whole campus smelled like onions and bologna. The cause: senior hoagie sale. In the cafeteria eight production lines were set up, and each row tried to outdo the other. For over an hour there was mass confusion as the lettuce, meat, cheese and tomato supplies quickly diminished. The result of all the fun was 2,100 delicious hoagies which students sold to family, friends and strangers in order to add to the class treasury.

Senior Trip

Oct. 8 Memories

We laughed and sang as we rode on crowded buses.
We stretched out on the grass to eat our packed lunches,
Toured the busy Capitol, visited the museum of wax,
Watched money roll off the press, listened as FBI gave the facts.
At Smithsonian Institute we walked for miles.
We bought ballons, and shared our smiles.
It was a happy day we spent together.

Marlin Bechtold reverts to his oral phase.

Campus Chorale

Now Is the Time to Live

Campus Chorale met four days a week for twenty-five minute practices. The Chorale planned a challenging program under the theme "Now is the Time to Live." This program was presented at several local churches on Sunday evenings. The group also went on a four day singing tour. Their last stop was Christopher Dock, where they participated in the High School Music Festival.

Come, Let Us Sing!

Campus Chorale, Senior, Ladies', and Men's Choruses presented two programs open to the public, one at Christmas and one in the spring. Old favorites and modern carols made up the Christmas program while the spring program featured Easter songs. Senior Chorus concentrated on beautiful selections from the Messiah, including "And the Glory of the Lord," the "Hallelujah Chorus," and "Since by Man Came Death."

Psych club "Psyches out."

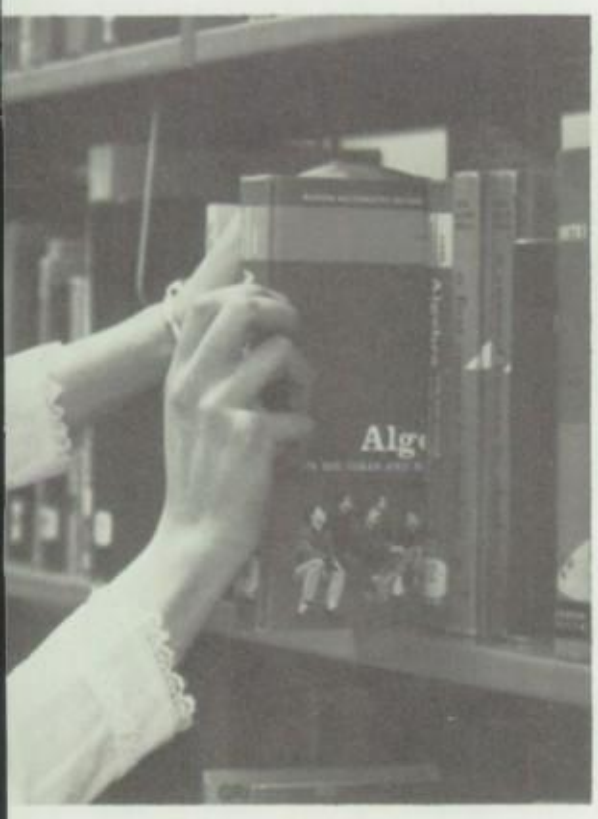
Future Librarian?

"Try to beat that one!"

This year for the first time, students formed a Psychology Club to explore the many facets of psychology. They vented their questions to speakers and gained a better understanding of themselves through a temperament analysis test. Group dynamics and films provided other avenues of experience.

Approximately twenty-five people met for a weekly duel to determine a champion. These enthusiastic students made up the Chess Club which sponsored a school wide chess tournament in January. It was the first year for the club, but it went off at a galloping pace with the help of Mr. Lipka.

We Created



The Library Club, a new one this year, was formed to help the librarians with some of their duties. The six members helped to paste in book pockets, pack old books which were sent to the archives and occasionally to help the librarian, Mrs. Moshier, check out books or sign passes.

On Monday mornings a talented group of students met to work on art projects under the supervision of Mrs. Buckwalter. These Art Club members worked with ink blowings, pencil drawings, paint and tie-dyeing. The club's major project was making a nativity scene of papier-mâché which was placed in the classroom lobby.

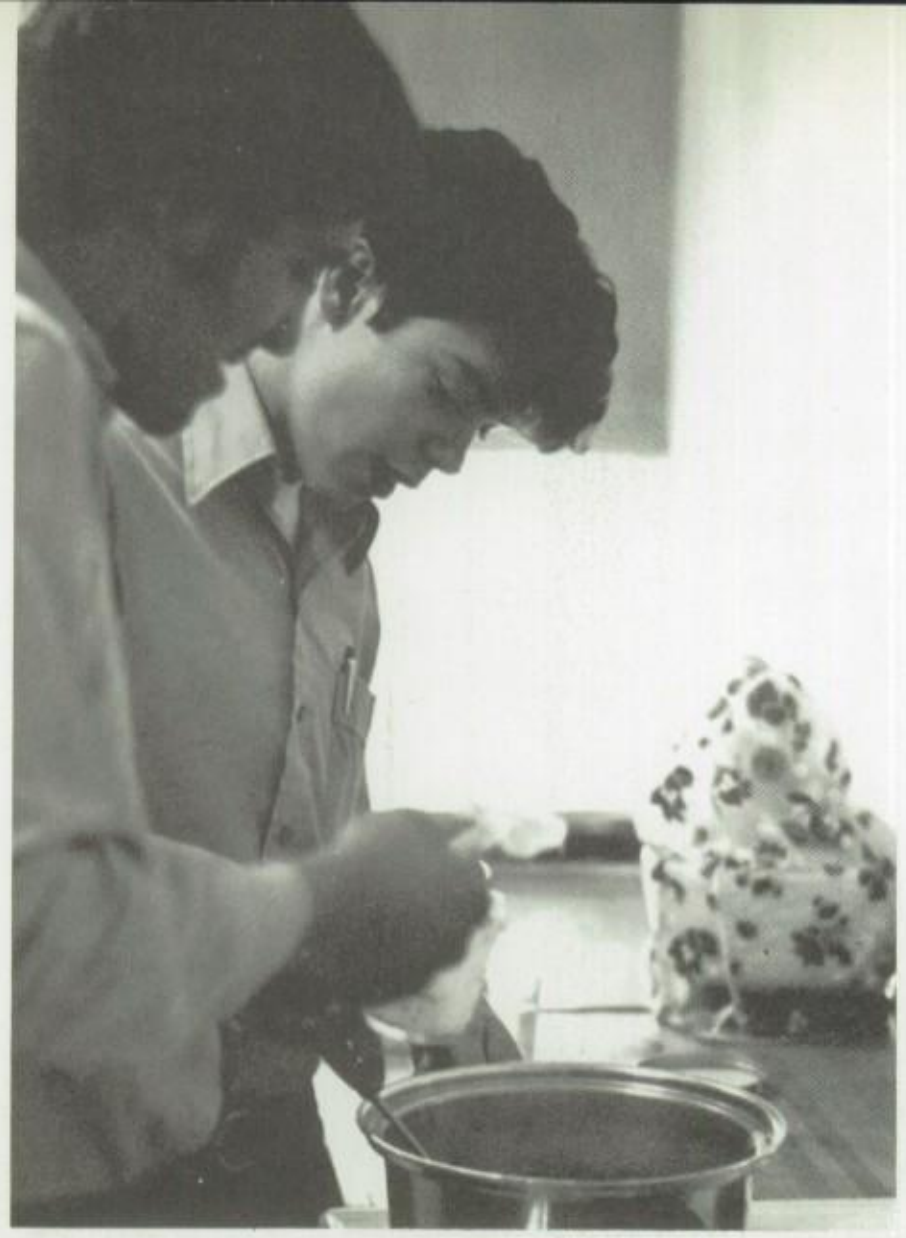
David the shepherd boy



"Are you sure this goes in here?"

"I hope Miss Hoover doesn't look."

Marlin Smoker and Ken Bucher check their little black books.

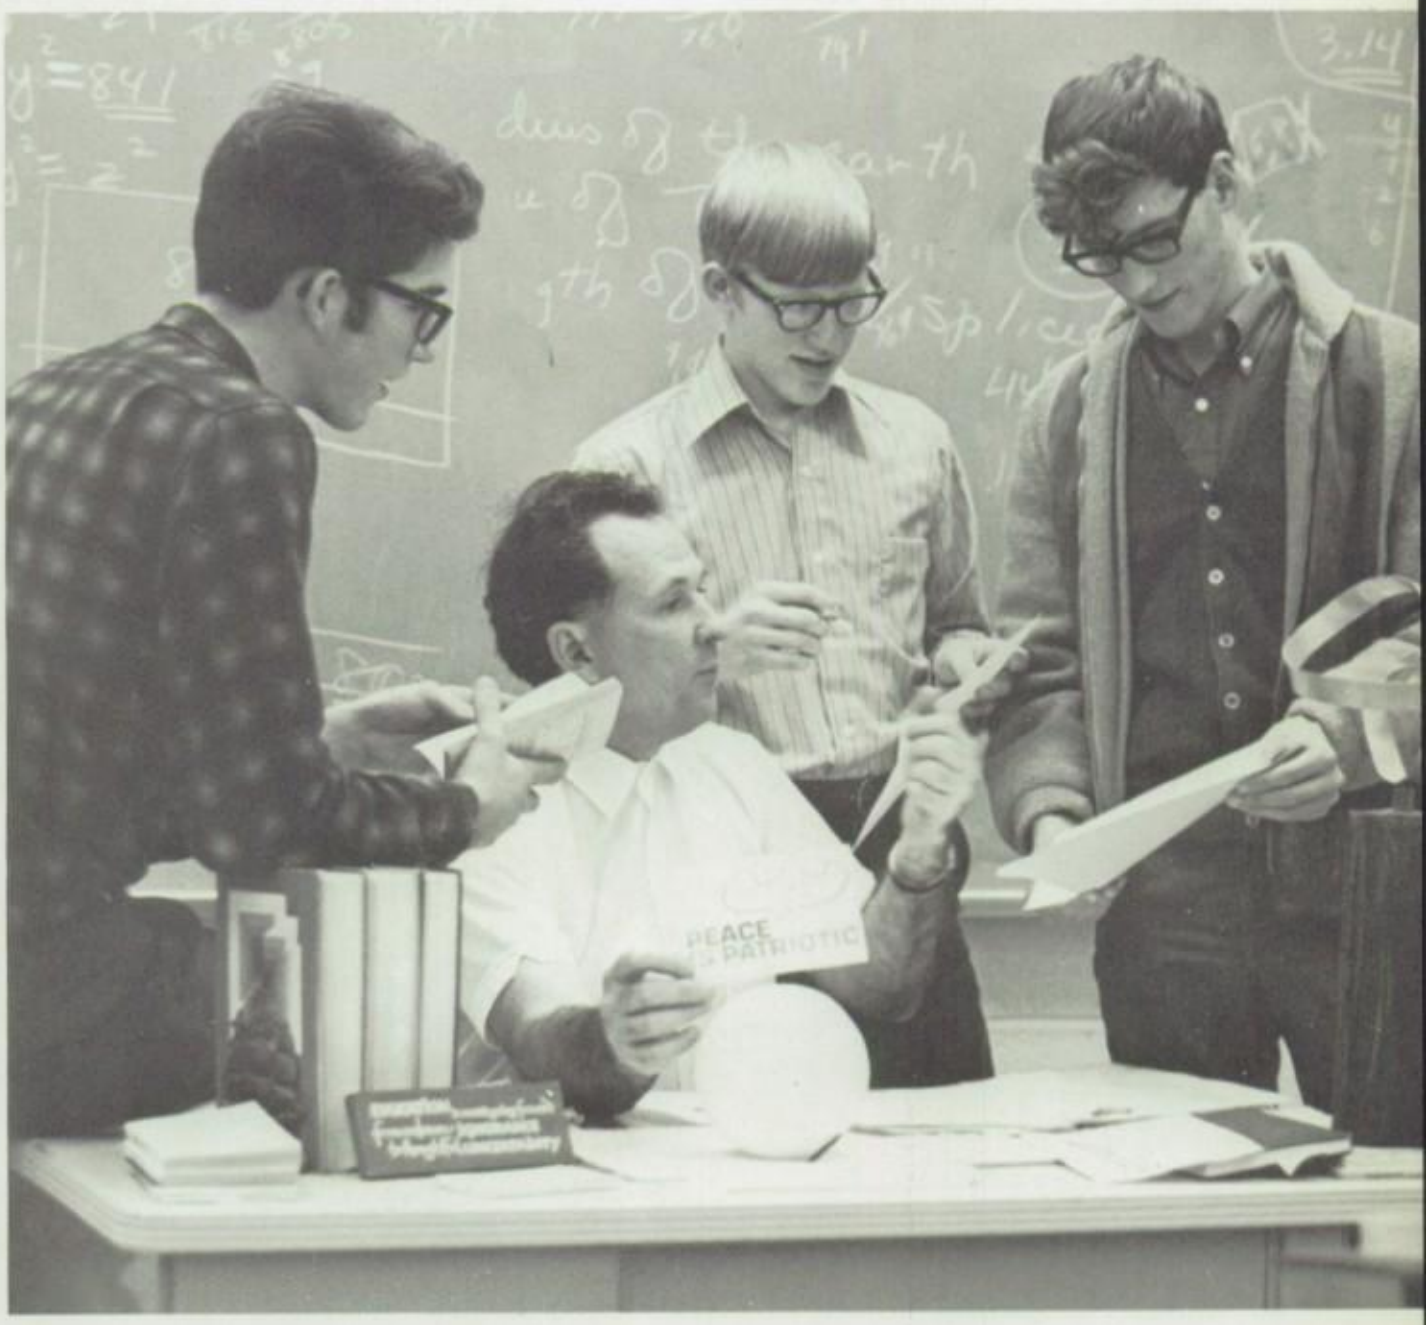
In the home ec building you may have seen Miss Hoover surrounded by a group of rowdy males. Don't worry; they were only members of the Chef's Club, and Miss Hoover was their instructor. In this club's sessions, the boys learned skills they will need in bachelorship.

Did you ever see a referee at one of our intramural basketball games hesitate before blowing the whistle? Most likely he was a member of the Officiating Club, putting into practice the many rules the club learned from their instructor, Mr. Dan Wenger.

The Stronger Sex Prevailed

On Tuesday afternoons you may have seen some people on the classroom building roof. In case you didn't know, these boys were members of the Radio Club, working on their radio antenna. Most of the club members already have their Novice License for operating the amateur radio equipment. Mr. Larry Wenger was this club's advisor.

"Math is Fun" was the theme of this three-member club. The club sessions were spent in solving puzzles and playing games involving math. Mr. Kreider and his math buffs found their meetings to be both stimulating and enjoyable.



Peaceful math club?

'That's enough static from you!"

Needles — Any Way

Still life in yarn.

The twenty-six members of Needlecraft were certainly an ambitious group, and produced a lot of work that proves it. Girls used their creativity in making wall hangings, rya pillows, and handbags. Other members knitted or crocheted vests, scarves, afghans, and slippers.

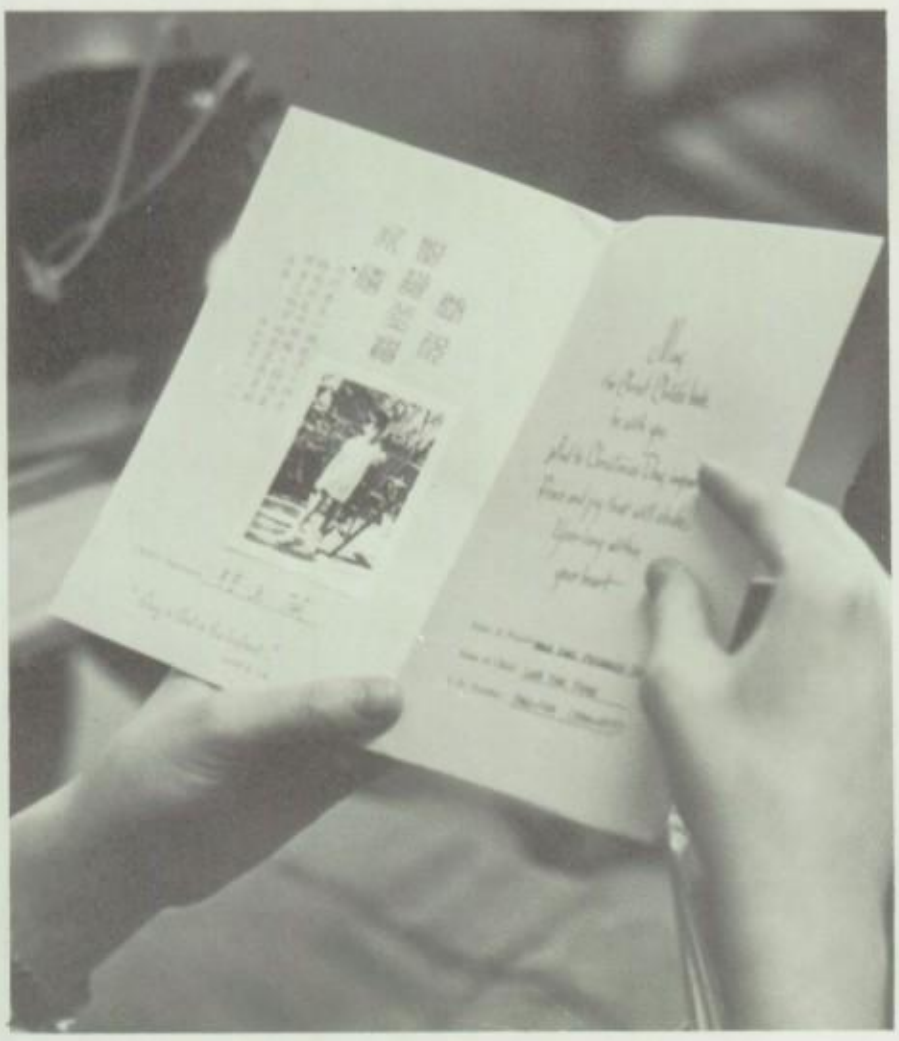
Betty Lou loops her yarn pillow.

You Like Them

Mrs. Wenger watches as Rachel adds up sale profits.

With service to mankind as their ideal, this large group of girls investigated what a nursing career would involve for them. With the money made by selling doughnuts during free periods, they supported an Oriental orphan.

With Noah Good as an instructor, First-aid Club members learned how to care for the injured before a doctor arrives. With this knowledge, they practiced various forms of treatment on each other and also gave artificial respiration to a life-size doll.



Christmas greetings from Lan.

Spellbound.

Guess what club this is!

Foto fans joined a club under the leadership of Mr. Elton Moshier. Members learned picture-taking techniques and then put these principles to work with the club's camera, a Kodak Instamatic 100. The developed pictures were analyzed and mounted in a booklet. Monthly, a visual program from Kodak was viewed, proving to be both informative and interesting.

When the weather was suitable, Mr. Elton Moshier led the Bird Club members on hikes around campus and across the Millstream into the woods to identify by sight or sound their feathered friends. As many as twenty-five species were identified on one hike alone. In winter, club members watched birds at a feeder or listened to recordings of bird calls. The members also viewed movies and slides of birds taken by the advisor, Mr. Moshier.

"Is it a sparrow or an ostrich?"

Photography Proves Popular

Interested students formed a club to learn what goes on in the tiny cubicle known as the darkroom. The club's first activity was to examine the current electron-photon theory. Under Mr. Michael's supervision, students discovered printmaking techniques and eventually developed their own pictures.

The Craft Club members were very enthused about their projects. In leathercrafts, girls made moccasins, belts, wallets, and pocketbooks. Some club members made beautiful wall plaques out of copper. Some of their finest work was displayed for the student body on the outside bulletin board.

Quiz-out!

Memorizing, practice jumping, last-minute cramming, praying, losing, tears, quizzing-out, winning, cheers: all were a vital part of the activities that the three quiz teams went through as they provided stiff competition in the Youth For Christ quiz league.

Our teams, the Brown Team, the Maroon Team, and the Yellow Jackets, coached by LMH alumna, Doris Charles, did very well this year, especially the Yellow Jackets and the Brown Team who placed very high in the final standings.

Europe '70

Last summer twelve LMH students and counselor, Mr. Dan Wenger, spent five weeks in Europe. They were part of a study-tour program sponsored by the Foreign Study League.

The group flew from New York to Rome and spent a week there viewing ancient ruins and absorbing the culture. They then spent a week each at Lucerne, Switzerland, and Paris, France. England offered the excitement of crossing the channel by Hovercraft. After spending ten days in London, the weary group of students and their homesick counselor flew home — penniless!

We Socked It to 'Em!

The soccer team had an excellent season, with a 7 win-1 loss record. The one loss was a hard fought 3-2 game with Pequea Valley. The team traveled to Belleville for a tournament in which we placed first. Playing interscholastic soccer for the first year, the team did a tremendous job and hope for a good season next year.

Soon after school began, a hockey team was organized and met for practice two or three evenings a week. The team played only two schools, Christopher Dock and Lancaster Country Day, and lost both games. Yet, the team showed much spirit and sportsmanship and had greatly improved in their playing by the end of the season.

This year the girls' basketball team pitted their talents against those of Pequea, Conestoga Valley, Christopher Dock, Manheim Central, Lancaster Country Day, and Faith Christian high schools. Although they weren't always the victors, the team displayed good sportsmanship and enthusiastic spirit.

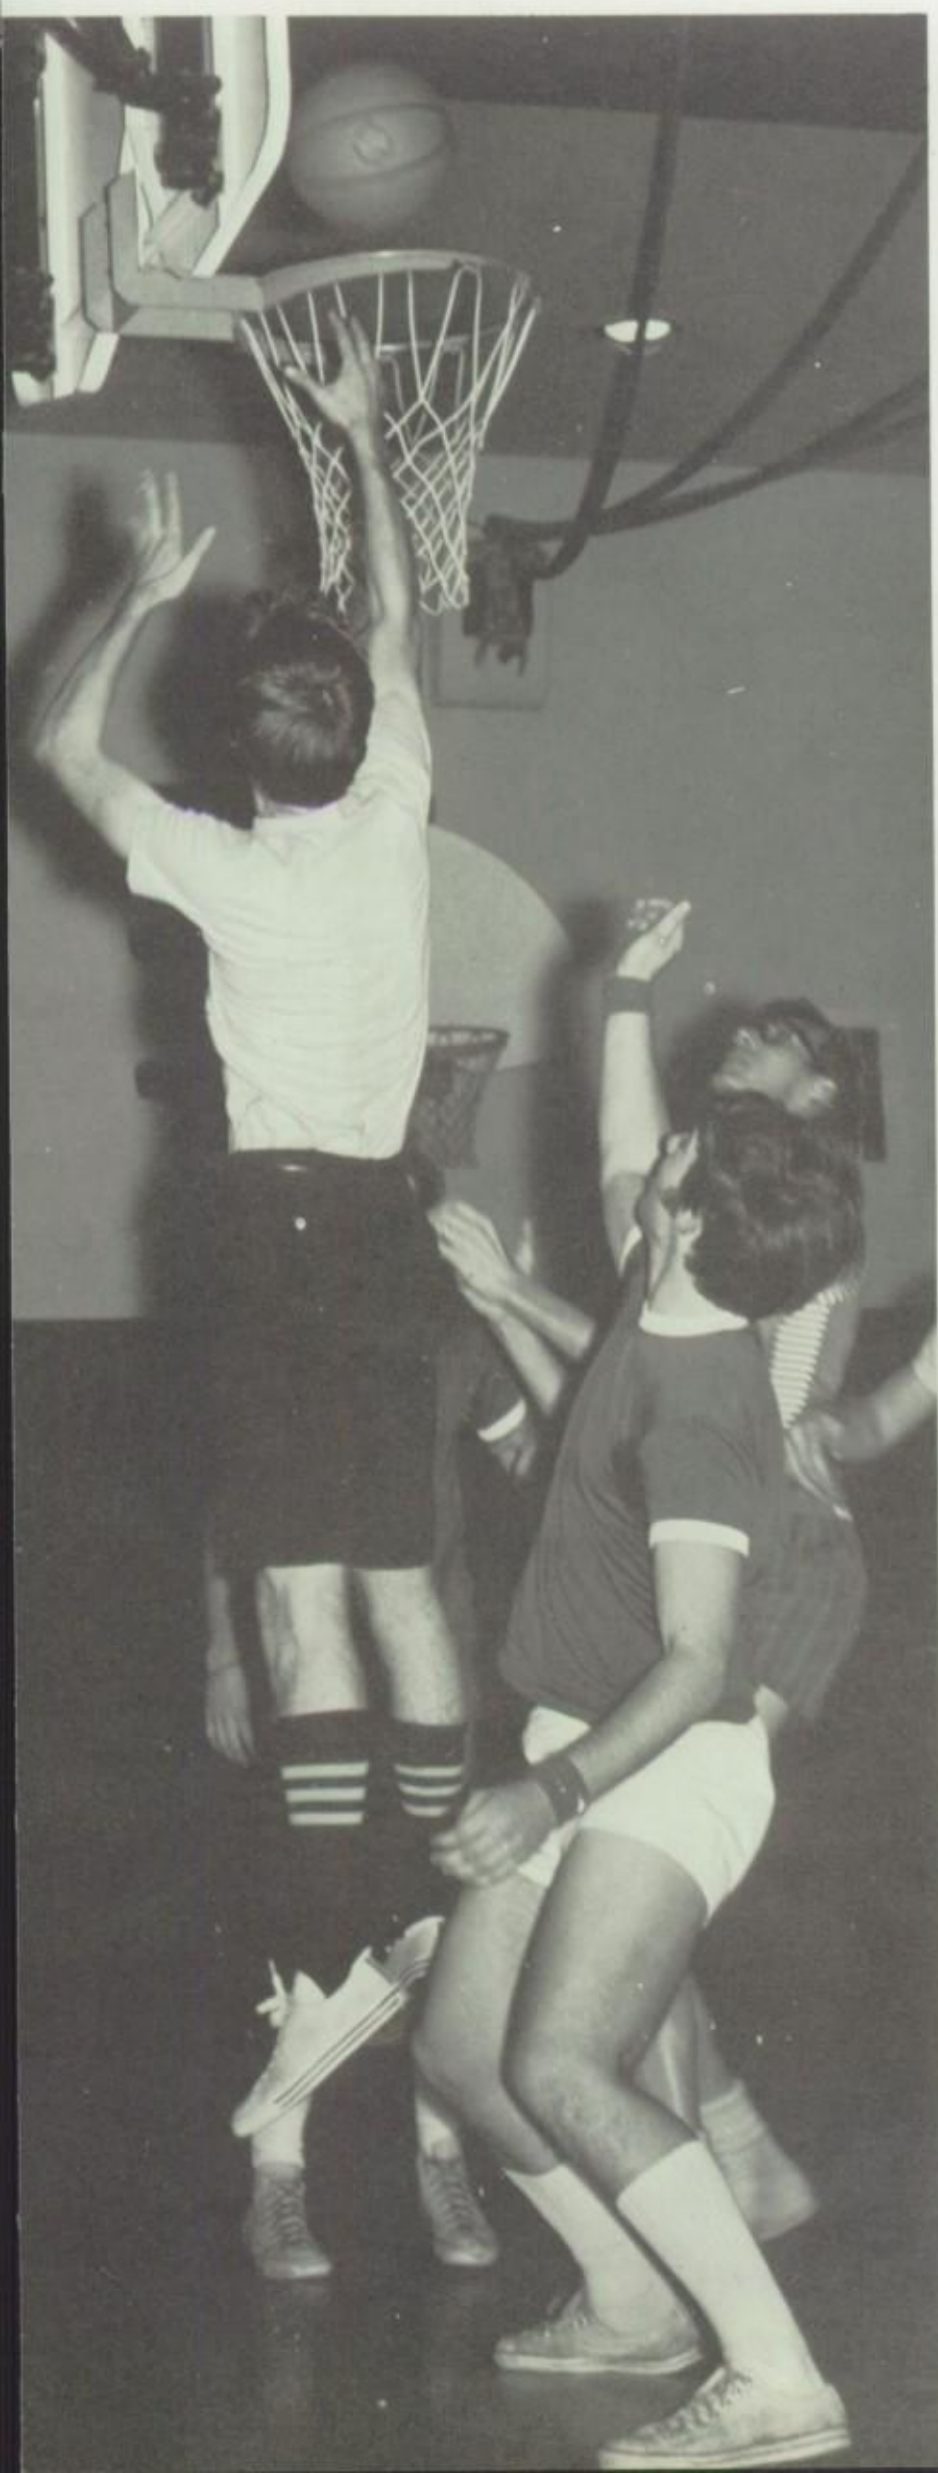
We Want Two!

Jeryl adds 2 points to our score.



This year, for the first time, LMH participated in interscholastic basketball. Since it was their first year, the team had a long up-hill run. Most of their games were played in an independent league with college-age men, and the competition was tough. They played Belleville twice on Belleville's home court and were beaten both times. They played host to Belleville a month later and lost by two points. Lancaster Country Day was defeated in all their encounters. Our team improved noticeably throughout the season.

Give and Take

"Just give me one more chance."

Because it is an individual sport, ping pong received less attention than other sports at LMH. Ping pong interest was revived when students participated in an all-school tournament. In the finals Bruce Hess defeated Marlin Nafziger and became the new ping pong champ.

"I bet you can't return this one."

A Down-to-Earth Sport

The wrestling team was organized for learning and fun and did not participate in interscholastic competition. They trained in anticipation of a good team in future years.

Ice Follies

With cold weather came ice skating. During gym classes and evening free times, the Mill Pond was filled with the sounds and sights of red-nosed skaters. Once, when the ice became too rough, students gave a donation to the Lafayette Fire Company for flooding the pond. During February the dorm and several classes held skating socials.

With new equipment this year, gymnastics became a big part of LMH life. The parallel bars and high bar provided extra enjoyment for the athletic student. During gym classes and evening free times, students bounced out their frustrations on the new trampoline.

Suspension

Track and field day was the cause of sore muscles and blistered feet and fingers. The new track provided good facilities for shop put, discus throwing, high jump, broad jump, and pole vaulting. Students displayed their skill in the many running events.

During early fall and spring, the softball diamond came alive. After school dorm students spent free time playing ball, and during school there was an occasional intra-mural game. Although there was no organized team for interscholastic competition, the faculty-student game always aroused plenty of excitement.

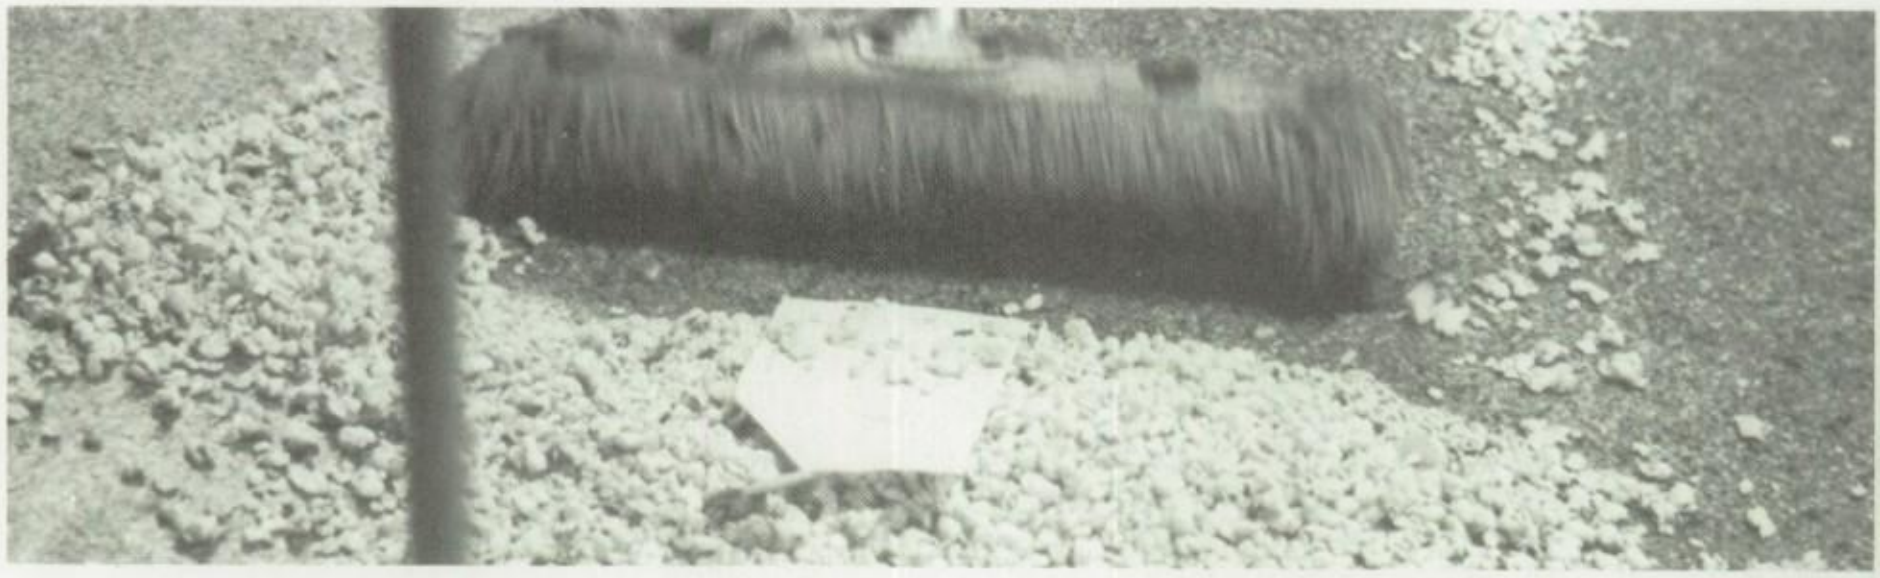
Signs of the Times



"Get out of here!"

A sign from national Love Your Hall Manager Week.

Communal Living — LMH Style

Dormitory living was an experience all its own.
There were unpleasant things:
Restrictions, work staff, room checks,
Being ruled by matrons, hall managers, and bells.
There were lonely times and boring times
And times when we wanted to leave campus more than once a week.
But there were happy times, too:
Playing basketball,
prisoner's base, football, or tag;
Wading in the Mill Stream, chatting with friends,
Studying together, and living with a roommate.
Through all these experiences we became as a family.
What belonged to one, belonged to all.

Lit Societies Abolished

This year dormitory students voted to drop the long-standing LMH tradition of the literary societies. In place of the competitive societies, the dorm was united by a council chosen by the students. This council organized various clubs including drama, music, sewing, and gymnastics. The council also planned many of the dorm's activities including socials, Christmas caroling, and an ice skating party. Half-hour prayer circles were compulsory three evenings a week. Other small groups organized on their own and met for prayer, fellowship, and sharing.

Thank You

Miss Gehman, Mr. Zook, and Mr. Michael for their patience and selfless donation of time.

Mr. Edward Patrick, representative from Taylor, for his timely advice.

Peel's photographers, who snapped grinning chorus members and provided color transparencies.

Joyce Longacre and all others who helped write senior captions.

Teachers for enduring the confusion of Laurel Wreath collections.

Mr. Lowell Stoltzfus for allowing Randy to work late in the darkroom.

Rick for heating the Laurel Wreath office (sometimes).

Typists Linda Hershey, Hilda King, and Faye Sangrey for squeezing captions into little places.
